| 1945-1946  | Republican |               |             | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The closing orders applied to Frenchman Creek a few days each year.   |
| 1952       | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | Daily regulation of canals was necessary from June to September, but storage water from Enders Reservoir made up the shortages.   |
| 1953-1954  | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | All but the earliest priorities were closed to natural flow throughout major portions of the irrigation seasons.  |
| 1955       | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | "The natural flow water supply" ... in the basin ... "was less" ... in any year since the dry thirties." The storage water provided by Bureau of Reclamation reservoirs that were being built at this very time were very beneficial to stream pumps.   |
| 1956       | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | "The (basin) supply in 1956 was only slightly better than" 1955, but crop yields "were substantially better."   |
| 1957-58    | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | Abundant precipitation precluded any regulation.  |
| 1959-60    | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | Although there was some administration of natural flow rights, the presence of storage water from the relatively new storage reservoirs made it such "that no major administrative problems arose."   |
| 1961-1962  | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | There was apparently some administration of natural flow appropriators during 1961, but the presence of abundant storage water prevented any administrative problems. Furthermore, during 1962 there so much natural flow "that very little storage water was used except on federal projects" and, therefore, apparently little if any administration was necessary.   |
| 1963-1964  | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | "The water supply in the Republican River Basin was deficient in both 1963 and 1964." Due to the presence of five federal storage reservoirs, this hadn't happened for a long time. When an irrigator would not have enough natural flow, he would buy storage water from the appropriate reservoir. However, more and more land was coming under irrigation in the Bureau of Reclamation (BOR) Frenchman-Cambridge Division, so BOR no longer had enough storage to satisfy both the irrigators with natural flow rights that were running short and also the Division. Since the Division was given preference to the individual irrigators, the irrigators couldn't buy enough storage water any longer and there was considerable administration of these irrigators with only natural flow rights. This was particularly true in 1963 for the Frenchman River and Medicine Creek junior pump diversions. |
| 1970       | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | As of 9/30, "the Republican basin reservoirs were the lowest in many years."  |
| 1975-1976  | Republican | NA            |             | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The closing order which applied to the Frenchman River and Stinking Water Creek for both years remained in effect except for two brief periods until the end of August when Enders Reservoir's storage supply was exhausted.  |
| 1975-1976  | Republican | NA            |             | Bartley/Red Willow/Cambridge Canals |                                      | 4/3/1946      | Closing orders which applied to Red Willow and Medicine Creeks were in effect for much of July and August.  |

| 1977-1978  | Republican |               |             |                                     |                                      |               | Drought conditions prevailed during the biennium. "It appears the increase in well development in the Republican Basin has brought about a continuing decrease in surface water supplies." Storage in Swanson, Harry Strunk and Enders Reservoir was at the lowest levels since the reservoirs were initially filled.                                   |
| 1977-1978  | Republican | June          | last week   | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | Closing orders were issued to irrigators on Frenchman River and Stinking Water Creek upstream and junior to the canal during the last week of June until the last week of August both years.  |
| 1977-1978  | Republican |               |             | Bartley/Red Willow/Cambridge Canals |                                      | 4/3/1946      | Closing orders were in effect for most of the season for Medicine and Red Willow Creeks.  |
| 1979       | Republican | April         |             |                                     |                                      |               | In April, the Bureau of Reclamation requested that all storage reservoirs upstream and junior to Swanson, Enders, Hugh Butler and Harry Strunk reservoirs be prohibited from storing water. The orders were issued and remained in effect until July 6. "This was the first time that the department regulated storage appropriators on a large scale." |
| 1979       | Republican | July          | 11          | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The order which applied to Frenchman and Stinking Water Creeks was rescinded on July 25.  |
| 1979       | Republican | August        | 2           | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The report referred to this order which was rescinded on August 28 as regulation of natural flow, but the water in Frenchman Creek was storage water from Enders Reservoir indicating a storage right was at issue.   |
| 1979       | Republican | August        | 9           |                                     |                                      |               | The order which applied to Red Willow Creek was rescinded on August 29.   |
| 1979       | Republican | August        | 13          |                                     |                                      |               | The order which applied to Medicine Creek was rescinded on August 24.   |
| 1980       | Republican | July          | 3           | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The order which applied to Frenchman and Stinking Water Creeks was rescinded on August 19.  |
| 1980       | Republican | July          | 7           | Cambridge & Red Willow Canals       | see comment                          | see comment   | The regulating orders which applied to Medicine and Red Willow Creeks were rescinded briefly from August 12 to 15 and permanently by the first week of September. Both of the canals have several different water right numbers and, therefore, priority dates that go with them.   |
| 1981       | Republican | ?             | ?           | Culbertson Canal                    | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The order which closed some 23 irrigators on Frenchman and Stinking Water Creeks with the exception of a few days near August 1 was rescinded on August 31.   |
| 1981       | Republican | July          | 9 & 10      | Cambridge & Red Willow Canals       | see comment                          | see comment   | 50 rights which were closed on Medicine and Red Willow Creeks were opened on July 17 and August 13, respectively. The two senior canals have numerous water right numbers and associated priority dates.  |
| 1982       | Republican | July          | 12          | Culbertson Canal?                   | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 5/16/1890     | The order which closed some 23 irrigators on Frenchman and Stinking Water Creeks was rescinded on September 9.  |
| 1982       | Republican | July          | 20          |                                     |                                      |               | The order which applied to Red Willow Creek and closed 14 rights was rescinded on August 16.  |
| 1982       | Republican | August        | 2           |                                     |                                      |               | The order which applied to Medicine Creek and closed 36 rights was rescinded on August 16.  |

| 1983       | Republican | July          | 25          | Culbertson Canal              | D24-25 & 29-30                       | 10/6/1890     | The orders which applied to Frenchman and Sinking Water Creeks were rescinded no later than September 21.  |
| 1983       | Republican | July          | 25          | Cambridge & Red Willow Canals | see comment                          | see comment   | The orders which applied to Medicine and Red Willow Creeks, respectively, were rescinded no later than September 21. These canals have several water rights numbers and priority dates. These orders regarding this entry and the above entry resulted in the closing of 80 junior and upstream irrigators.  |
| 1984       | Republican | July          | see comment | see comment                   | see comment                          |               | "Between July 9 and July 25, a total of 88 appropriations were closed for the benefit of the Culbertson, Red Willow and Cambridge Canals. They remained closed without interruption until mid-September."  |
| 1985       | Republican | mid-June      |             |                               |                                      |               | "Natural flow appropriations on Red Willow Creek, Frenchman River, Sinking Water Creek and Medicine Creek were closed for the benefit of the Red Willow, Culbertson and Cambridge Canals"....until the first week in September.  |
| 1986       | Republican | mid-June      |             |                               |                                      |               | 87 irrigators on Red Willow, Frenchman, Sinking Water, and Medicine Creeks; and a section of the Republican River were closed until September 10 for Red Willow, Cambridge and Culbertson Canals.  |
| 1987       | Republican | late June     |             |                               |                                      |               | The closing order which applied to Frenchman, Sinking Water, Red Willow, and Medicine Creeks; and a portion of the Republican River below Trenton Dam were closed for the benefit of Culbertson, Red Willow, Bartley and Cambridge Canals until the order was rescinded at the end of August.  |
| 1987       | Republican |               |             |                               |                                      |               | "Four of the five major reservoirs contained fair storage supplies at the beginning of the irrigation season. Enders reservoir was the exception, continuing its history of inadequate supplies."  |
| 1988       | Republican | mid-June      |             |                               |                                      |               | Earlier than usual water administration of Frenchman, Sinking Water, and Red Willow Canals ran through mid-September.  |
| 1988       | Republican |               |             |                               |                                      |               | Except for Enders Reservoir, the major reservoirs had good supplies. Harlan County and Harry Strunk Reservoirs had storage in the flood pool.  |
| 1989       | Republican | late June     |             |                               |                                      |               | Natural flow appropriations on Red Willow Creek (23 permits), Frenchman and Sinking Water Creeks (37 permits) and Medicine Creek (51 permits); and a portion of the Republican River between Trenton Dam and Cambridge Diversion Dam (11 permits) were closed for the benefit of the Red Willow, Culbertson, Bartley and Cambridge Canals until the middle of September. |
